

ABOUT THE GPG

The Government Property Group (GPG), formed in 1995, is the preeminent government asset property management organisation in Australia.

The GPG is a sub-committee of the Australasian Procurement and Construction Council and is comprised of representatives from state and territory governments that have responsibility for the management of owned and leased government property.

GPG members actively participate in a nationally-coordinated way to address government property matters. This approach delivers more immediate and effective outcomes for government while providing leadership to the private sector and the community.

The GPG progresses initiatives that will:

- drive efficiencies in portfolio management
- deliver improved property solutions
- improve asset management
- advance sustainable building outcomes
- create consistent policies and frameworks across jurisdictions
- create effective stakeholder engagement

The GPG's stakeholders include:

- other government departments
- the Commonwealth Government
- the Council of Australian Governments and associated councils and committees
- private building owners and industry groups, such as the Property Council of Australia and the Green Building Council of Australia.

COLLABORATION

The GPG is a collaborative forum in which jurisdictions work together to realise property management opportunities through leveraging the portfolio size together with the expertise of its members.

The GPG's focus is on:

- identifying emerging issues in government office accommodation
- developing best practice guidelines in government office accommodation
- establishing property management solutions that deliver better value for money

The GPG is committed to maximising positive outcomes that support the current and future service delivery needs of government agencies and the community. This commitment is captured in the GPG's vision, which is:

To be recognised by stakeholders and industry as adding value and promoting excellence in the way governments deliver property solutions

Collectively, governments are the largest users of office space in Australia and therefore have a strong interest and influence on the performance of commercial buildings.

Leadership by the GPG can provide innovative property management delivery models and solutions. The GPG is the leading centre of excellence on government property management and is proactive in facilitating best-value outcomes for government across Australia.
